

Independent observers (observers) monitor and provide data on exporter arrangements on-board livestock export vessels. Their observations cover loading of the vessel through to completion of discharge at the final port.

Observers provide us with data to assist with effective regulation of the livestock export trade.

We carefully review all data provided by the observer and identify any issues that require regulatory action. If we find significant issues, we require the exporter to take corrective actions.

We apply a rigorous quality assurance process to the data provided by observers. As part of this process, we prepare a redacted copy of the data for the exporter. We provide this redacted data to the exporter within 8 weeks of voyage completion.

We publish a summary of the observer's key observations on our website. This provides transparency of voyage activities and animal welfare outcomes. Where possible, the observer approves the summary report prior to its publication. This is to ensure it is an accurate account of what they observed during the voyage.

The information we publish relates to export operations carried out in relation to livestock. This encourages compliance with our regulatory framework by livestock exporters, and provides assurance to Australia's trading partners regarding how we regulate livestock exports.

We have also provided guidance around categories of issues or non-compliances commonly identified by observers.

For consistency and certainty on timing of publications, observer summary reports are published quarterly. Summary reports finalised during each quarter are published by the first Thursday of May, August, November and February.

We allocate report numbers at the time we assign an observer to a voyage. Changes in circumstances may result in the observer not being deployed on the voyage.
